Report from our "Safety For All" Committee

Ice cream colours are dripping over a few park benches in Martin's Meadow. Thanks to a small band of roving artists (Resident Artistic Lead Freja, sister Aurora and a random passerby) and Dennis at City Parks, we have some fresh paint and a spring in our step.

Watch this melt and spread across the neighbourhood. Don your dungarees and join us!

Michelle T., rogue painter

Backyard Birds

Our neighbourhood has a significant amount of green space and mature trees, creating a haven for a diverse array of birdlife. This summer, the usual suspects have made their appearances. The iridescent starlings, with their striking glossy black and blue plumage, have been frequent visitors, showcasing their elegant aerial displays. The humble house sparrows add a touch of everyday charm—their presence a constant reminder of resilience and simple joys.

A little yellow warbler graces our yard, cheerful songs erupting from the tiny ball of sunshine. The contrast of its bright colours against the green leaves is a daily treat, a small moment of beauty, amidst a busy urban life. Adding drama to our backyard are the crows, their familiar caws echoing from the large tree behind us. Occasionally, a pigeon or two will drift by, their feathers dancing on the breeze before they're carried away. This month, the melodic dawn chorus of a robin treated our ears before we even caught sight of it.

What other feathered friends will choose to grace our backyard this summer? This ongoing avian spectacle is a reminder of the natural world's ability to flourish even within a bustling urban environment. We invite you to share your backyard bird sightings!
